In regards to Mac computers, the Homebrew PPA has one of the largest audiences of power users and prosumers. For years, the Mac hardware served by the Homebrew PPA has been limited to systems with what were considered older Apple CPUs. As the Open Mac usage and ecosystem has grown, the Homebrew team has been forced to update its Brew application to target the newer Apple CPUs. This created problems for the Homebrew PPA with new Apple CPUs, e.g., EFI vs. Legacy boot issues. For those interested in the topic, it's worth a read to read the Homebrew blog post . Workarounds for the issue with EFI/Legacy booting include: With the release of macOS 10.14, a new EFI boot option has been added to the Mac BIOS. By default, the native EFI booting option was set to the Legacy Mode (rather than Apple-designed EFI Boot). This means that you should, in general, be able to use the Homebrew PPA to update your Mac's firmware. brew update brew search hbase brew install hbase Homebrew has been a valuable add-on to my personal workflow for a few years now. I use it to maintain my Python, Ruby, Perl, and other packages and the Homebrew community is one of the most generous communities. The Homebrew PPA team is to be commended for regularly updating the package catalog and continuing to improve the overall Mac experience with homebrew. Updated the bios to bios <https://www.mymacbookpro.com/BiosUpgrade.php> to help those with the 8th gen update. The 8th gen is a minor BIOS update that will not brick hardware. I've included a note below.

First, we have the Appleseed update. Release notes for the last few updates to 10.13.4 have now revealed Appleseed, the component that provides VXA support to the Mac Pros. This is the module that powers the new GPUs. While Appleseed doesn't reference the Mac Pro 5,1 in the FAQ, it does in some notes. Additionally, the AppleSeed application bundled with the Catalina release includes the code needed to enable the GTX 970M GPU. Apple also admits, using the term "fallback" in the release notes, that GPU support has not been implemented for the Mac Pro 5,1s. Next, we have the NVidia driver updates. Thread about Nvidia driver updates (which have been in flight over the last few months) have taken off the forums. This is likely due to the fact that the version for 10.14 beta is no longer available, reducing the possibilities for it to work on the Mac Pro 5,1s. If the driver updates do not work, this may also be the reason the update is not included in the main release. One forum user also states that NVidia informed them that the GPU drivers will not support the Mac Pro 5,1 even if they do work on the 10.14 beta. More on that on their support page. Lastly, we have the Intel CPU support. 4 cores are supported out of the box. However, it appears that having a core underperform will result in missing updates. A forum user reports that with four cores running at 2.4GHz, Catalina is only running at 1.7GHz. The forum also mentions models with third-party cooler running at a higher clock. This may explain the lot, but it may also simply be due to hardware limitations and the known TDP (thermal design power) of the Mac Pro 5,1s. Earlier information about a high-end 750W power supply in the Mac Pro 5,1s can also be found. This is likely the single biggest factor in this not being included in the last release. 5ec8ef588b
